

Cambridge Elements

A new concept in academic publishing

Shakespeare and Pedagogy

www.cambridge.org/elements

CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

The teaching and learning of Shakespeare around the world is complex and changing. This collection synthesises theory and practice, with provocative, original pieces of research, as well as dynamic, practical engagements with learning contexts.

Series Editors: Liam E. Semler (Professor of Early Modern Literature in the Department of English at the University of Sydney) and Gillian Woods (Senior Lecturer in Renaissance Literature and Theatre at Birkbeck College, University of London)

Advisory Board: Janelle Jenstad (Victoria University), Farah Karim-Cooper (Shakespeare's Globe), Bi-qi Beatrice Lei (National Taiwan University), Florence March (Université Paul-Valéry Montpellier), Abigail Rokison-Woodall (University of Birmingham), Emma Smith (University of Oxford), Patrick Spottiswoode (Shakespeare's Globe), Jenny Stevens, Joe Winston (University of Warwick) Ayanna Thompson (Arizona State University)

Features

- Fresh content due to fast publication (12 weeks)
- Updateable
- Authoritative, peer-reviewed content
- Focused on cutting-edge topics and directed by leading scholars
- Concise, 20,000-30,000 words in length
- Available in HTML, PDF and print

Benefits to Authors

Copyright

Authors of Cambridge Elements will retain copyright in their work.

Flexibility

With lengths of approximately 20,000 – 30,000 words (40 to 75 pages), Elements offer an opportunity to develop a theme in greater detail than is possible in a traditional journal article, yet more concisely than would be expected in a full-length book.

Rapid Publication and dissemination

Elements will be published within 12 weeks of acceptance of the final manuscript. Authors will be provided with a standard template and each manuscript will be copy-edited.

Indexing

Relevant metadata for Elements series and individual Elements will be sent to the key abstracting and indexing organisations. Altmetric data for Elements (showing the social media impact of the work) will also be available.

Peer Review

Each Element will be peer-reviewed

Visibility

Elements will be available as digital collections to institutional libraries and also available to individuals and third-party purchasing platforms in e-book and print format.

Functionality

Digital-first format allows: Enhanced search
Linked references
Full colour images
Updateability
Citation export
Multimedia content

Open Access

Cambridge offers Open Access publication options for Elements.

Elements: Shakespeare and Pedagogy

provides a carefully curated collection of explorations, interventions, and provocations.

- Explorations deliver extended, research-based analyses and pursuits of ideas, processes and practices.
- Interventions present practical, innovative engagements with learning contexts. Such pieces may involve teachers or practitioners as collaborators and will speak in direct terms to real teaching situations.
- Provocations offer critiques of practice and policy, reimagined or reoriented approaches, propositions of alternatives and urgent manifestoes.

Want to find out more?

If you are interested in publishing in the series and would like to know more, please visit www.cambridge.org/elements or contact the Series Editors, Liam Semler (liam.semmler@sydney.edu.au) and Gillian Woods (g.woods@bbk.ac.uk), or the Commissioning Editor, Emily Hockley (ehockley@cambridge.org).

CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS